How will I study?

A Level is more than study. To do well at Spanish it should become a hobby - a pleasure! You will take part in role-plays and discussions in class, do translations and write essays at home and learn plenty of grammar and vocabulary. We watch Spanish films and TV programmes and use the IT suite for listening activities. We expect you to read current affairs magazines and newspapers in Spanish (available in the library). You will want to spend some time abroad. This is the best way of learning a foreign language.

What does the subject combine well with?

The beauty of Spanish and languages generally, is that they are desirable for most jobs and they can be combined with anything. This is especially true at university level. Many Science and Engineering courses, for example, include language study and many universities send their students abroad for a year to study their chosen specialised subject and develop their language skills as well.

UK businesses suffer on an international level due to a lack of personnel with language skills. With an A Level in a language you will be a more attractive prospect both for universities and employers, and ultimately you could increase your earning potential.
